100 Questions

Que. 1 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below it. Certain words have been highlighted for your attention.

Bhivji Harle is a name that won't be remembered. A poor, 55-year-old farmer and a resident of Vadala Vardhpur village in Maharashtra's Wardha district, Harle will become another statistic, a collateral in the mananimal_conflict, a forgotten footnote in the grand narrative of tiger conservation. In the evening of September 19, a tigress known as T27C1 attacked and killed Harle on a field in his village. He was the third person she had killed in five months. Harle's real killer, however, was not the tigress but the astonishing apathy of selfproclaimed wildlife activists and conservationists, forest officers and politicians, who should have known better than to release a conflict tiger into Bor Tiger Reserve, around which are scattered dozens of villages. T27C1, more commonly known as the 'Bramhapuri problem tigress' began life in the Bramhapuri forest division of Chandrapur district — home to the Tadoba Tiger Reserve and the 'tiger capital' of Maharashtra. Densely populated, humans and big cats live cheek-by-jowl in Brahmapuri. Despite such proximity, though, the conflict has been remarkably low. The division is home to 608 villages, 47 tigers and more than 80 leopards (2016) camera-trapping estimate by Wildlife Conservation Trust), and yet in the past four years, only 13 people have been killed, 205 injured and 2,549 heads of cattle grabbed by wild cats. Moreover, the conflict is restricted to a few pockets. A 2014 study offered some clues to the reason for the comparatively low level of conflict here. A radio-collared tigress named Kala, for instance, was found to move only at night, avoiding humans even if they were just 100 metres away and rarely venturing near villages. But T27C1 was no Kala. She had killed her first human at an age of 18 months and has been drawing blood ever since.
